Girl In The Mirror Cecelia

This forms the backdrop for Cecelia Ahern's latest book - The Girl in the Mirror. A dark and poignant story revolving round Lila and her grandmother, Ellie or Grellie, as she is fondly called. I confess I found the book very confusing at first!

Girl in the Mirror by Cecelia Ahern - Goodreads

I've read all the Cecelia Ahern books and this one was special. Two short ghost stories. Both are quite dark and quirky. "Girl in the Mirror" was so captivating I felt sucked into it by the end of the first page. It was as beautiful and horrifying as anything written by Edgar Allen Poe.

Girl in the Mirror JULY 1992 'Grellie, Grellie, I'm here.' Lila knocked on the door, excitedly. She hopped from one foot to the other and felt her white cotton sock slip from above her knee and tickle her skin as it slithered down to rest in an exhausted heap around her ankle, like a drunken fireman down a pole.

In the mirror, Lila suddenly felt her arms lift as they wrapped themselves around Jeremy's neck, though she couldn't feel him. Then she started to spin. Fast, then faster, round and round, till she felt sick. All around her, faces smiled and she wanted to call out for help, for them to get her out of here, but they weren't looking at her.

Cecelia tells the heartwarming tales of the boy who gives life to his memories to include an absent father cheering at the sidelines of his childhood football matches. Or the widow who can't remember her husband's face and wants to recapture how he looked first thing in the morning. The Girl in the Mirror was a fascinating read for me.
